

The Daily Market Report

PORTLAND, April 7.—The egg market for a month has been and still is one of the notable features of the local trade. At a time of the year when the market usually is gutted, when prices as a rule are down to the low level for the year, and when dealers are wondering how they will get from under their accumulated stocks, the market is actually firm, at prices higher than have been known at this time in years, and the tendency is apparently upward.

Today Front street produce dealers quoted 21 1/2 to 22 cents a dozen, and the bulk of the trade for the day is supposed to have been done at or around the latter figure. There were reports on the street of a fraction better than 22 cents being paid, but they lacked confirmation. In any event, at the prices named the market was firm and active.

At this time a year ago practically all the Front street establishments were overloaded with eggs, retailers were light buyers because they were getting liberal supplies direct from the country and the demand in the north for Oregon eggs amounted to little. Prices ranged from 16 to 18 cents in this market, and a good many dealers who were averse to that they call the storage gamble nevertheless were compelled to put large quantities of eggs into the poles.

To date the Sound markets, Seattle in particular, have been the chief demand factors in the local egg situation, and the bullish influence there is likely to continue for a time at least.

Whether it will last through the season of flush production is a matter of uncertainty. In anticipation of the demand at exposition time Seattle dealers have for a month been buying eggs freely in Washington, and in Oregon as well, and paying prices that were something out of the ordinary for this time of the year. Large quantities of Valley eggs have the past few weeks gone through Portland direct to the Sound, and few if any moved at prices under 20 cents.

The comparatively light supplies in the local market the past month are in a large way accounted for by the movement from Valley points to the North. As a result, to date there have been no serious accumulations here, and it is understood that no very large quantities have been put in storage in Portland. Storage operations on the Sound, on the other hand, have been extensive. Dealers there are preparing for the demand they expect during the exposition.

For the time the demand on account of the Easter trade is something of a factor in the local market, but in the main it has been the steady demand in the North that has kept the Portland market well cleaned up all the time and made possible the relatively high prices now prevailing. Dealers today expressed the belief that the market would take a slight turn downward next week.
